Did you know?

When a site is first granted a permit it defaults to an "A" grade site until it has been inspected. This grading dictates what the annual subsistence fees will be.

The impact of having a poor inspection can be significant.

An "A" rated site will easily slip to a "B" rating with the associated additional minimum fee increase of 5%.

More significant breaches could increase subsistence costs by 30% if ratings fall significantly.

A major non-conformance or pollution event could also result in site suspension or legal action costing a great deal of money. Suspension would stop the site from operating at all until all the appropriate corrective actions had been implemented and these actions approved by the Environment Agency.

The cost of legal action runs into many thousands and possibly revocation of the permit.

Let WPS help you keep these costs to a minimum
